Négritude

Nichelae McFarlane
nmcfarl1@binghamton.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://orb.binghamton.edu/alpenglowjournal Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by The Open Repository @ Binghamton (The ORB). It has been accepted for inclusion in Alpenglow: Binghamton University Undergraduate Journal of Research and Creative Activity by an authorized editor of The Open Repository @ Binghamton (The ORB). For more information, please contact ORB@binghamton.edu.
Abstract:
Négritude exists as a critical framework for analyzing the interactions between black and non-black Francophone intellectuals. It originated as a cultural movement that swept through the African diaspora as an affirmation of the value of blackness. This renaissance paved the way for this anthology to discuss issues of heritage, culture, identity and self-worth. "Negritudes" continues the work done on black consciousness through a combination of critical theory and poetry.

Keywords: black, renaissance, Tupac, Maya Angelou, panoptican, worth Where does one rise when they have nowhere to go, nowhere to turn to,
Nowhere to call home, nowhere to rest a weary head, when the head of both families, Will turn to stone,
From which no blood can be drawn,
But will inhabit the trees,

How is a lynching different, when trees bear strange fruit, Versus being thrown out into the street.

How does one rise
On broken feet,
On broken spirits,
On broken dreams, on the backs of broken soldiers, discharged with no relief, with careless abandon, to Be seen and not heard, Better yet do not be seen, and herd your ridicule of colourful birds Away from the sky, and into the dirt, even further underground, because

What does one rise to, when there is no support, When there is no love,
When there is no open door, Only open palms, and opened Psalms To drown in the rising tide Of hate towards those who are not on Their side, And tears of those who cry For what they do not understand, Yet feel, but

Who will rise when they cannot heal, when they cannot believe, when they cannot steal away to become the dream And hope they’ve thought of everyday, because With all that remains there’s no one left to say

I rise. I rise. I rise They take my life as the game, it’s the same as it is every other day got black folks looking through a white racial frame, as I see as I breathe we not as free as one might think, they label us hoes and push out out to sink, not swim cause within, the system we for sale like everything else on the street, can be bruised, can’t be rude, but still good enough to eat, I’ll break my hand on your labels, a crime against moral decency, got us locked up for the only life that we can breathe, for us gathering off the beat, staring down our body because we’re labelled property, and liberty ain’t cheap when we full of crime and poverty, oh sweet pathology- leaving me, leaving us devoid of potentiality, singing with the church that I’m learning, learning to hear the right voice, and I’m trying, trying to make the right choice, I am a promise to be anything that I wanna be a visionary, more radical than new words in the dictionary, a revolution in key major, no minors can you hear me, taste individual desires in a world full ah mothering, decriminalised, please change up the othering and bring through from outside, reach far from wide, undercover- not crossed in time, I’m crossed all the time, black so I’m steeped in crime, dark face so I’m trapped in the fight, exploited and collected, the appropriation of life, that’s antiblack right?

Few understand why we cry, a joyful noise sent to the most high, the best anarchy of coloured girls we could ever find white male dominated gaze staring in a panoptic, make it the 3P frames-property, positionality, and power, we keep the fame, notoriety that facilitates my inequality, but painted a different shade for maintaining their ability to discriminate don’t call it blue call it beige, and have it renamed nigga to thug, it’s a criminal both ways, black in the white gaze, covered in distaste, but not hidden in disgrace, I’m legally blind to open antiblack unjaded individuals, so we change up the methods that we’re learning, flip it as our pinnacle, operating dialectically looking back is what we finna do, challenging life as we’re trapped inside our crucible, our blackness is immovable, our thought patterns unusable, still exploited truth be told, but moving through the hope how much their worth from picking cotton to digging for diamonds in the dirt, made to feel like dirt for looking like dirt looking nothing like dirt how society works [they] flirt with [our] lives for power and enough wealth to touch the sky but with wings clipped before building those buildings yet [they] still push [us] off it with no parachute or healthcare [if we] do manage to live, yet still, black people dap them up every time [they want us] to kill for them, or take a pill for them, sing for them, make the very clothes on [our] backs then take it off just like that clap for [their] innovations, call it building nations, a one pot dish only the rich get to eat only to give [us] the cooks the leftovers, [boi jehovah, I tell you], these people have no idea that bodies were made in your image, the facts of life that the black woman was the first to give life, the same one that end up birthing white, yet take the birthing right say we need to learn it right [that I’m worth $20, yeah right…

one man’s trash another man’s treasure worth more than ever before resilience in my DNA, ancestry from trade hair unbraided raising prices

I’m priceless]
They said,
“We made promises, nah…not me, I’m locked up unwanted, someone made promises for trade in truths disguised as nuclear bombs they’re easier to swallow you see the whole world dying in one stomach, and beside it rests greed, not me, I’m in a bunker somewhere else in disbelief of the treaties made by people who strip me down to bone, making sure to touch the hidden parts of me they now own discarding the blood of my blood of my flesh herded into concentration camps, the ones left in plain sight and pray they escape with their memories-- Jesus wept, little Maria slept, in a manger-- beside the mess we call democracy, nah…not me, I’m strapped down being forced to breed, someone calls it democracy not me, because I’m afflicted by the things others can’t see, one word,
white privilege, and if you just say two, you’re one of the unlucky few to be trapped with me in an impossible world that rewards our deaths, cremates us to be the dust that grow strange fruit, the same one that gave Monkey D. Luffy his powers and nourished the fears that we instigated nah…not me, I’m buried beneath thoughts and prayers someone created to inspire a nation united in hatred not deterred by love, resolved by the scales of justice for me, nah…not me, pas

moi I’m forgotten

for two or three rallies and a bad tweet, zeen”.
A young man once said,
“The hate you give little infants, F-s everybody.”
But now Tupac’s dead, and we still collecting bodies like a Frat-boy just out of college, repping letters like it’s giving knowledge of how to avoid lockup and continue the cycle. If we’re being honest: “broken families not broken bottles” as the original Coca-Cola follows; drop Pepsi as part of the cult following- the game plan, structures that ring hollow for black people.
That obstruction of justice carried through as protests, and cultural conquests.
“Black memes, black vines, and black death; profits for a prophetess foreseeing their own profiting less, but collecting bullets at 100% interest”.
They leave lifeless boys with toys on their chests, blood stains splattered, tattoo’d on the rest of their playmates and in the aftermath, “burning down worlds to smoke out black rats” only to shoot their own foot after the fact, cry out that they under attack and demand an apology.
“Like where’s it at?”
They’re setting traps of despair to taste our fear of swimming, of living near deserts and dumps and burial ground immortalised at “15th Street and Unarmed Drive”; to get arrests and convictions for the lives stolen like black diction. Identity broken down to feed their addiction, made into ballots for politicians and have “innocence while black” be a fiction that could never line up to the vision made for history and the future for little dark-skinned children. Listen, “It’s amazing,”
the hate we’re given, out the mouths of babes but as adults we’re still singing.